SPRING ODE.

From God-forsaken suburbs streaked

And miserable with mud, Past twisted trees that lack the sap
to bud,
Comes Spring, with shuffling galt,
Red eyes and squelching boot, Sheumatto, ragged, wretched, sour as

Comes Spring, a-sneaking, slinking, Comes Spring with clay upon her draggled gown.
She makes a furtive sally, a tramp's attempt, and limps into the town

Now ley pavements turn to thick, black grease, For melting Spring has come; And all the prisoned germs of all disease

Now gambol in release.
Now kick and frolic like wild goats and creep into a million gaping throats;
For poisonous, wheezing Spring has come.

Discouraged window boxes saddy strive
To make last year's poor sickly blooms revive;
Displeasing Spring has come;
And huddled subway crowds in sodden clothing Steam with a mutual loathing. For Spring, disgusting, sneezing Spring

COLONIAL THEATRE. The Regenerating Love, Three Reels,

With Ormi Hawley and Lubin Cast. One of the best three-reel Lubin features that has been seen at the Co ionial is on the programme for today. It is entitled The Regenerating Love and has to do with a young lad whose father has become separated from his mother and, tiring of the father's irascible temper, the boy leaves to bat-tle with the world alone. He meets a man and woman, members of a vaude-ville team, and they, learning that the boy's father has just died, leaving to him a large estate, they get him drunk and keep him so until the male mem-ber of the team goes to the former home of the lad and impersonates the heir. While there he fails in love with the boy's sister, but he has already said he was her brother, and so matters become more and more complicated until the false heir goes to the real one and tells of his duplicity. The regeneration of the vaudeville pair is effected and the lad comes into his own and brings his strange friends to a new and permanent home. The Town With a Great Industrial Or ganization Which Might as Well Have Been Called Krupp.

(Special to The Bulletin.) Washington, D. C., April 7.—Describ-ing the city of Essen, Germany, and the great industrial organization that has made it famous, the National Geographic society, in today's statement concerning the geography of the Euroean war, says:

"The town of Essen might just a well have been named 'Krupp.' O course, Essen was founded centuries before the House of Krupp, but its im-portance and industrial fame is of very recent growth. It is, in fact, a product of the famous firm. Almost everybody in Essen nowadays depends for his livelihood upon the firm of Krupp, and Essen is a town of 300,000 population. It might also be pointed out that while the herizon of Freen is ut that while the horizon of Essen is bout limited by Krupp steel, the firm extends far beyond the limits of the city, with numerous branches, iron-ore mines, coal mines, smelters, an in-dustrial village bearing its name, foundries in Berlin and other cities, Essen is situated in the heart of a

If army titles were conferred upon the fun makers of the stage, the rank given Tom Thomas as the Major General of the Army of Fun would be well merited. After 1848, the struggle was finally success-ful, the Krupp works sold their goods throughout Germany, and numbered customers in more than half of the countries of Europe. By 1873, 12,000 vorkmen were employed, and the firm workmen were employed, and the firm had begun to purchase iron and coal mines and blast furnaces. Long before their triumph, however, the Krupps had put into operation those social service reforms that were destined to find echo around the world. In the early 50's the firm had estab-lished for its workmen a sick-aid and pension fund, from which the German Empire was to draw the inspiration that led to the establishment of a state nsurance system. "The firm has always remained the personal property of the Krupp family. It is owned today by Bertha Krupp, who, in 1908, married the Prussian diplomat, formerly attached to the Embassy at Washington Dr. Gustav von Bohlen and Halbach.
